"The former Director of the FBI should not be investigating his predecessor. It's very unfair to the FBI," Jay Sekulow told the Washington Times on Friday. Comey, the central figure in the investigations into the Trump campaign and the Russian government's interference in the 2016 presidential election, has moved on to television work as a celebrity pundit, where he can speak freely. The remarks on Friday are likely to renew speculation that Comey will write a memoir about his nearly yearlong relationship with Trump, who fired him last year. "It's very disturbing, and, frankly, unheard of, the former

(10) In my. It was complicated when we called a technician to repair our internet connection. The tech said that the problem should be fixed by Wednesday. The technicians could not do the job that day, but on the next day we were informed that the problem was solved. We contacted the technicians again, and again they could not do the job, but on the third day they finished the job. That was on Thursday morning. I was informed that the technicians were closing because of the holiday. It was on Friday morning that we received the bill for repair. We knew then that the credit card company would not pay it. I thanked the technician for fixing our connection and asked him to keep the bill. He replied that he did not want to give me the bill, since it had been paid by the credit card company. I asked him to return the bill to the person who had brought us the bill and asked him to pay it. The technician told me that I was asking him to take bribe. The credit card company had already paid. I replied that I did not want the money, I just wanted the bill to be returned to the person who had brought it. The technician said that I was accusing him of taking bribe, and went on to say that if I wanted the bill returned he would do it, and that if he did not return the bill he would be fired. This happened on the same day that we received the bill. The technician actually threatened to call the police. I had to call the technician myself to solve the problem, because the credit card company was not responding. The technicians who had brought the bill were waiting in line, and the one who threatened to call the police was sitting in the back, where he would not notice us. The technician who had fixed our problem said to me that he could not do anything for us.

The clerk who had brought the bill said to the technicians that they were giving up, and should collect the money. The technicians left. We called the credit card company to tell them that the bill was returned. The technician said that the bill was not taken as a gift, but was given to him at the time that the job was being done, and that he was not allowed to return it to the person who had brought the bill. I told the clerk that we were just talking with the technician, and that we would not pay the bill. The clerk asked what to do, and the technician told her to collect the money. I replied that the technician had said that

The first of two Nataraja (worship) songs in the Thai composer Somphong Phuangwattana's 1989 Tamil-language film Pathum Peiyar. It is a standard, though not a particularly effective, example of the Thai film song. The song forms part of the film's strong ensemble of folk music, including others by Kudisi and Yuwadee Lueanaputta, and the chant Sorn (Aso noi), composed by Wuthichai Phanomyo. The song is from the cassette album Songs From The Village (Music From Nephew) When I first listened to this song a few years ago, I was quite disappointed. It was so bland and I can't remember what is the point of it. Only of late, I heard it out of curiosity. After that, I discovered the song was one of the best songs in the Thai language. I still have no idea what the song means, but the Thai lyrics, which are in poetic language, are very lyrical. This is a very fast song, and the singer reminds one of a female man-machine hybrid. This is because she is very young at the beginning of the song, then she becomes matured. The song was very popular in the early 1990s, but faded out after a few years. The singer, Seksan Chaicharoen, is a great name in the Thai music industry, even if he was not known for his singing talent. From the internet for an equivalent piece of music, I knew it was only for mature audiences, because of the strong language in the song. Compared to the other songs, this one is silent. It is a man and a woman who gets into a hot argument. The woman tells the man that she is leaving him, when her mother calls her home. He continues to beg her, until the song ends. The lyrics are not interesting at all, because of the language. I like this song because it is very creative, has a nice instrumental background, and great music and rhythm. They were experimenting at the time with the use of drums, and I think they came up with a successful recording. I do not know the title of the song,

I'm wondering if you guys can help me, I'm trying to make a file explorer in my application for Windows 7. I want to be able to click on a button and have it open a file browser. I'm really not sure how to do that. I haven't worked with the taskbar too much (I'm really new to programming and programming for windows). Thanks! A: The easiest way is to create a shortcut of Explorer.exe, right click on it, choose "Properties" and set target to the explorer. This will open a folder window to the selected folder.
