modified: Closed-loop control of spinal cord stimulation during peripheral nerve stimulation. Spinal cord stimulation (SCS) is a safe and effective treatment for chronic neuropathic pain. During conventional SCS, the stimulating electrode is tethered to the pulse generator, thus limiting control of the stimulus waveform's shape and amplitude. Closed-loop control of SCS has the potential to improve clinical outcomes by providing optimal stimulus amplitude in response to detected peripheral nerve activity. Here, we tested closed-loop stimulation in the rat femoral nerve with a freely moving animal and in a human finger during needle-stimulated peripheral nerve activity.
A US Food and Drug Administration-approved neurostimulation system was used to stimulate the femoral nerve in rats. Electrodes were placed in the femoral nerve and a closed-loop algorithm was used to stimulate the femoral nerve using motor-evoked potentials measured from the contralateral tibial nerve. Results from the rat femoral nerve and the human finger were compared. Closed-loop stimulation controlled the peripheral nerve stimulation to a similar degree as conventional SCS; however, the physiological range of evoked activity was lower with closed-loop stimulation. Closed-loop stimulation resulted in slower and more variable responses than conventional SCS for a given stimulus intensity. SCS is a safe and effective treatment for chronic neuropathic pain; however, the amplitude of the stimulation is set at a constant level during conventional SCS. This limits the amplitude of evoked physiological activity and may lead to suboptimal clinical outcomes. Closed-loop control has the potential to improve the clinical outcome of SCS, and clinical use should be considered in the future. Q: Is there a way to search all class files inside a directory or a folder? I'm using the search method to search for a string in files on a directory. Is there a way to search all files in a directory or all the subdirectories inside a directory? A: Apache provides the Command Line Interface. The command line tools can be executed using the command line utility apxs. You can see the documentation for it. Just create a shell script using the shell interpreter for
